Bonn Says It's Buying U.S. Missile $2.5-Billion Deal For NATO Arms

BONN - West Germany has agreed to spend 7 billion Deutsche marks ($2.5 billion) over the next decade for a new generation of anti-aircraft missiles to strengthen NATO air defenses, the Defense Ministry said Tuesday.

The agreement, which involves both U.S. Patriot and European Roland missiles, is expected to be signed by Defense Minister Manfred Worner and the U.S. de-

Under the agreement, Bonn will buy and deploy Patriot missiles for the first time. Twelve will probably be stationed near West Germany's borders with Warsaw Pact nations.

The American military will deploy an additional 12 Patriots at U.S. bases in southern West Germany, which Bonn will maintain.

West Germany will also deploy 87 French-West German Roland missiles - 27 around U.S. bases in the Eifel and Hunsruck areas and development of medium-range that could be used by American missiles and buman rights. 60 around West German airports

The Patriots are equipped with a cooventional warbead and can strike airplanes at medium and high altitudes. They are intended to replace outdated Nike missiles.

The Rolands would protect bases against low-flying planes.
Officials in Bonn said the agreement highlighted West Germany's willingness to strengthen its conventional forces.

The deal was "the most important program to strengthen the conventional NATO defense in Europe," Mr. Worner was quoted as saying in this week's issue of Der Spiegel newsmagazine.

But West German officials still expected the United States to complain during Mr. Worner's four-day visit to Washington that its share in West German defense exbudgeted 49.2 billion Deutsche marks in 1985, less than I percent in real terms above this year's military budget.

Shultz Says 'Stone Wall' From Hanoi Blocks Talks on Diplomatic Relations

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

SINGAPORE - Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Tues-day that all efforts by the United States to hold reasonable negotia-tions with Vietnam on establishing diplomatic relations bave run into a stone wall put up by Hanoi.

At a press conference after talks with Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore, Mr. Shultz was asked about the possibility of normaliz-ing relations with Vietnam. He said that two major problems had virtually ruled out any such prospect. The first, he said, was Hanoi's unwillingness to provide informa-tion on the 2,500 Americans still unaccounted for in the Vietnam War, leading-to speculation that some servicemen might still be alive. But Mr. Shultz emphasized that there was no evidence that any American prisoners of war were actually alive. He said, however, that when so many people are unaccounted for, there is always the possibility that someone is alive.

The other problem, he said, was Vietnamese troops are in cootrol. Mr. Shultz said that there had a constructive relationship between been some progress in the past year the United States and China lends oo returning the remains of some stability to the region and oot the U.S. dead. # Dock Workers, Backing Miners, Shut U.K. Ports

LONDON — Britaio's main ports were shut Tuesday as dockworkers began a nationwide strike. their first in 12 years, in a dispute linked to the 17-week-old walkout by coal miners.

The ports at London, Liverpool. Manchester, Southampton, Bristol. Cardiff, Glasgow and most of the country's smaller ports were at a standstill after leaders of the Transport and General Workers' Union ordered the union's 35,000 long-shoramen off the docks.

Nicholas Finney, director of the National Association of Port Employers, said: "It looks as if dockers at the main ports are all out."
The Financial Times, the country's main business daily, said that if the strike is solid, shortages of raw materials could be expected to develop rapidly.

Authorities at the Channel ports of Dover and Folkestone reported that the crowded passenger and 'ehicle ferries were running normally.

The employers and the Transport and General Workers Union. which represents the dock workers, agreed to discuss the cause of the strike, which was the use of unregistered labor to move iron ore bound for a steel plant picketed by striking coal miners. Eighty percent of Britain's 180,000 coal miners have been on strike for 17 weeks over plans to close some pits, and no settlement is in sight.

Clutside contractors had been hired at the port of Immingham, in eastern England, to handle shipments of iron ore for the British Steel plant at ocarby Scunthorpe. In support of the striking miners.

mmingham dockworkers had refused to handle the shipments. The miners are trying to halt steel production in Britain by

The NATO secretary-general, Lord Carrington, in his first major policy statement, has added the maintenance of trans-Atlantic relations to the alliance's two longstanding goals of defense and East-West dialogue, Reuters reported on Tuesday from Brussels.

In an article in the NATO Review, Lord Carrington said: "We each of us have some responsibility for maintaining in good repair the many links between the United States and Europe."

"The Atlantic gap cannot be wished away, and understandable differences of perception will persist. But they must not be allowed to obscure the interests or under-

Poland Says Meat Supplies Shrinking
WARSAW (Reuters) — The Polisb government has warned that meat supplies, in the past one of the country's most sensitive political issues, will fall 6 to 8 percent in the coming six months and that fish, tea and coffee will be harder to find, official newspapers reported Tuesday. The government gave no reason for the expected drop but official figures say state purchases of livestock from farmers were 8.5 percent lower in the first five months of this year than in the equivalent 1983 period. On the other hand, Poland has contracted to import about 125,000 metric tons of meat this year, compared with 41,500 in 1983, to try to avoid cutting rations from the current 5.5 pounds (2.5 kilograms) a month for each person.

The government raised meat prices in January and has promised not to increase them again this year. Two of General Wojciech Januzelski's predecessors, Wladyslaw Gomulka and Edward Gierek, were toppled by protests against overnight attempts to raise prices for meat and other foods. General Jaruzelski has tried to defuse potential unrest by announceing food price increases well in advance.

Greeks Bearing Grudges

What is to be done about an ally, Greece. whose people have duly and democratically elected a leader. Andreas Papandreou, with a bent for saving outrageous things? In a speech to his Socialist comrades in May, Prime Minister Papandreou called the United States "imperialist," letting Moscow olf as a "hegemonist," and declared. "Our strategic aim is the disengagement of our country from NATO." When President Ronald Reagan offered to put up a $250-million carrot for progress in Cyprus. Mr. Papandreou, not content to say he took another view, accused Mr. Reagan of "misleading" the public. He gave funher offense to the administration by ignoring its intelligence cautions and letting a suspected Jordanian terrorist skip the country in May.

An American official says it is "very frustrating to deal with a government, an allied government, that defends the Soviet Union and criticizes the U.S." It should not be necessary to observe, however, that exasperation is a poor source of policy. Mr. Papandreou's specific criticisms need to be answered in a cool way. But the United States, as the old uncle of the Atlantic Alliance, should not forget Greece is a democracy, an ally and a friend. Unfortunately, the administration has let it second-hand warplanes it had earlier planned to dispatch to Greece. The purpose of the change, or at least the purpose of publicizing the possibility of the move, is to indicate U.S. displeasure with a range of Greek pronouncements and with Greece's stand on terrorism. But the apparent effect has been to incite the Greeks, to no good end.

At such moments debate revives in Washington over whether Mr. Papandreou person-ally is anti-American or whether he simply finds it a political necessity to play to the ves - exasperating but real strain of Greek resentment and suspicion of the United States. We lean to the latter school. It took an Amencan of the right to make the breakthrough to China, and a Greek of the left to renew the military-bases agreement with the United States. Mr. Papandreou carried off that major alliance-affirming move last year. Americans should keep that in mind.

If Greece has been lax on terrorism, moreover, the way to deal with it is by consultation and persuasion, not by a step (regarding the warplanes) that will reinforce many Greeks' hostility to the United States.

Safe Nuclear Trade

The Reagan administration is having welcome second thoughts about the agreement on nuclear trade that was initialed and toasted by Ronald Reagan in China last April. It has been delaying submission of the agreement to Congress while seeking further assurances from Beijing, ff there is to be any serious prospect of delaying the spread of nuclear weapons around the world. Congress needs to insist that the agreement with China be a model, not a mockery, of safe nuclear trade.

What shaped the deal was Mr. Reagan's desire for something to sign on his visit, and the nuclear power vendors' thirst for customers. But there are major obstacles to this nuclear trade: China refuses to sign the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty and has long been suspected of aiding Pakistan in its clandestine plans to build an "Islamic bomb,"

When China's prime minister, Zhao Ziyang, visited Washington last January, he averred in a White House toast that "we do not engage in nuclear proliferation ourselves, nor do we help other countries develop nuclear weapons."
The Chinese affect to believe that this oral declaration was an acceptable alternative to tight, written agreements,

It is not. Quite apart from China's suspect nuclear dealings with Pakistan - which in Senator Alan Cranston's view is now able to produce several nuclear weapons a year — there is every reason for the United States to condition a nuclear relationship on China's full commitment to preventing the further spread of nuclear weapons. A lax agreement with China, which is not a U.S. ally, would offend all Asian countries that are. Ambiguities, however tempting to the drafters, would only sow the seeds of future resentments like India's about the reactor at Tarapur. Since China has no foresceable civilian need for reprocessing nuclear fuel, there is a rangible possibility that its plutonium will be diverted to military use. So China's desire to reprocess fuel irradiated in American reactors needs to be made subject to U.S. consent.

The risks of insisting on strict safeguards are less than exporters contend. American nuclear vendors talk gullibly about a $20-billion market in China, But even if the Chinese, owners of vast coal reserves, really need that many reactors, how could they pay for them? China is more likely to buy just a few, mostly to establish a general nuclear relationship yielding access to information and training. Taiwan and Japan are the more promising markets.

The administration, to its credit, has evidently realized that the agreement brought back from Beijing is not yet fit for the light of day. Officials need to secure specific agreement that China will separate its civilian and military nuclear programs, accept internation-al inspections of the former and refuse nuclear trade with any country that does not do likewise. That would be a treaty worth toasting.

Vice-Presidential Theater

Bleak thought No. 4,070 in an apparently endless series provoked by this year's election campaign: What if there is simply no way the vice-presidential-selection process can be made dignified and - new word - unboffo? What if each new variation on the process is certain merely to add a new comic form to political theater in the United States? What if this is God's will?

We introduce the awful possibility because the precedents for this year's vice-presidential es so strongly sugg Before there was North Oaks, Minnesota, after all, there was Plains. Georgia. And before moning of people to the candidate's presence and much summary, unexplained rejection. Is the present procedure being followed by Walter Mondale distinctively degrading to the many persons invited in for inspection, all but that there was, frankly, worse - much sum-one of whom will be found wanting?

Is the ethnic-sexual-regional-religious gavotte being danced any cruder than what was danced before? Being on record as believing that Mr. Mondale has done anything but distinguish himself by his performance over the past several weeks, we do nonetheless begin to wonder on this particular score who ever did do the vice presidential picking right? The alternative to the unseemly convention scramble (John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson in 1960, Ronald Reagan and George Bush 20 years later) is the unseemly deliberate-consideration ploy.

It may be hard to remember now, but Gerald Ford and his political lieutenants did no little personal harm to some of the candidates when they let it be known they were considering them and then dropped them - sometimes for family-related reasons that were leaked and caused these men much pain.

Presidential nominees invariably have a rather cruel and bumiliating way of discussing their prospective choices' strengths and weak-nesses. We remiod you here of the incredible taunting and teasing that preceded Mr. John-son's announcement that he had chosen Hubert Humphrey to be his running mate in 1964.

In his book on that election, the political historian Theodore White remarked that one observer said it had been as if "Caligula were directing 'I've Got a Secret.'

i ne Caligula factor is ever present, even in presidential cominees who see themselves much more in the Marcus Aurelius mold. This. we think, is because the choosing, by tradition, has been made such a personal, despotic affair, and because a body of custom and thought has grown up that makes the vice president a wholly owned subsidiary of the president.

The vice president owes everything - job, importance, perks — to the president; he can be given much, as Mr. Mondale and Mr. Bush were, but it can all just as quickly be taken away, and everyone knows this.

The ritual, therefore, when the selection of the vice-presidential candidate is made, is for that candidate immediately to begin to behave in a groveling and sycophantic way. Some presidents like this more than others, but the potential is there and does not change. When the beauty parade at North Oaks finally ends, the candidates themselves could recoup plenty by at least trying to avoid the demean ing Act II that is written into the American vice-presidential script.

Walter Mondale knows a lot about how it feels to be chosen, and what the requirements for self-respect are. He should insist that his running mate pass up the slavish obeisances and verbal goo.

The Chien-Tao settlement will be on the basis of complete accession to China's demands, Japan not only recognizing China's sovereignty over the territory to which claim was advanced in Korea's name, but also conceding China's full administrative rights. ## What Economic Path for Western Europe?

ARIS — Herewith some reflections on European economic policy based on six months spent in 10 West (plus two East) European countries. They are rooted in seven basic judgments. The time is rapidly drawing to a close when European democratic electorates will accept passively the current high levels of unemployment. Although the economies of Western Europe are interconnected in multiple ways with the economy of the United States, they have the capacity substantially to shape their own destiny

if they act together. • The viability of the European Community is endangered because it has not come credibly to grips with a new agenda capable of capturing the attention and commitment of European electorates, notably the new generation too young to remember the formative postwar years.

· Although Western Europe commands the capacity in basic science, creative engineering, entrepreneurship and working force skills to match or out-match Japan and the United States in generating and diffusing new technologies, it is now moving forward somewhat sluggishly. The pace could be speeded up if the EC acted more vigorously with respect to the new technologies.

 Although it may be that the countries of Western Europe have not built up quite as large a backing of depreciation of basic infrastructure as the United States, they have been living off capital in a profligate way with respect to the seas, rivers, lakes, forests and air of the region; and they have failed to carry out certain infra-structure projects of great potential productivity. The radical expansion of European infrastruc-ture investment would immediately increase employment of semiskilled and unskilled workers and expand output in the basic industries now suffering from large idle capacity.

• The banking system of Western Europe tand the rest of the world) is endangered by the precarious debt structure that grew up in the 1970s. No resolution of the debt problem can be envisaged unless Western Europe (and the rest of the advanced industrial world) resumes relatively high, stable, noninflationary rates of growth.

· High, stable, noninflationary growth rates are not possible for Western Europe unless all its major economies mount policies that combine effective monetary and fiscal policies with credible long-term incomes policies that assure that average money wages increase no faster than the average rate of productivity increase.

A similar set of judgments could be offered about the United States, and a set of proposals could be made along the lines set out below. Clearly, the United States will have to face up before too long to its four related areas of economic pathology; excessive real rates of interest, a grossily overvalued dollar, a dangerously large overall balance of payments deficit and a large structural fiscal deficit. That facing up could be conducted with skill and grace, or it could occur in the context of an international crisis capable of doing great political and strategic as well as economic damage to the world community.

'Program could cushion the world economy.'

The argument here is that a concerted West European program of the kind summarized below could cushion the world economy in the face of the adjustments that the U.S. economy must inevitably make, as well as respond to certain direct West European needs and possibilities.

Here are some comments on a policy agenda that flows from the judgments set out earlier.

The new technologies. No one can move about contemporary Europe without being struck by the almost obsessive interest in and concern with the new technologies. One reason for the phenomenon is a growing awareness that the character of the new technologies (notably those stem-ming from the microcbip and genetic engineering) will require important institutional tives of every Spanish cabinet since the late 1960s, before and after the

Mr. González obviously hoped that results would carry more weight and other changes in our societies if they are to be effectively fostered and diffused.

This is so because the new technologies, rather more than their earlier revolutionary predeces-sors, are linked to areas of basic science that themselves are evolving rapidly. It follows that the basic scientist, the creative engineer, the entrepreneur and the working force must form a new kind of team, often backed by venture capital comfortable with a world of high risk and high payoff. One of the most challenging dimensions of the new requirements is a new fraternal and osmotic linkage between the research universities and the production process — a kind of return to the linkage that generated the first industrial revolution in 18th century Europe.

The individual countries of Europe are responding to this and other requirements of the new technologies in different ways and at by no means uniform page. The differences stem from variations in history, institutional structure and policy. There are also marked regional differences in response. For example, the south of Germany is alive with high tech while the north courns with excessive pessimism the fate of the older basic industries.

But the point bere is simple: While there can be no external substitute for national responses to the potentialities and problems posed by the new technologies, serious sustained EC action could ease and accelerate national adjustments while exploiting the real but limited areas for common European action with respect to the new technologies.

Infrastructure investment: I have been drawn to the potential critical importance of infrastructure investment in Europe over the next genera-tion by three quite different considerations: First, anxieties about high chronic technologi-cal unemployment. European economists I have long known and respected have argued that the new technologies are skill-intensive, capital-in-tensive, highly productive and not linked to large physical infrastructure requirements like the rail-road and the motor vehicle. Therefore, they argne, we must resign ourselves to a large Lumperproletariat pushed into low-produc-tivity service sectors or permanently on the unemployment rolls.

I do not believe in this argument. I have concluded that present high unemployment in the Atlantie world is due to had macropolicy; and the new technologies, like their predecessors, will generate more jobs, over a wide range of skills, than they eliminate. But enlarged infrastructure investment appeals not only because it is required but because it could constitute a significant insurance policy if my apprehensive European colleagues are right and I am wrong.

Second, a concerted EC infrastructure policy would have strong appeal to the new generation of young Europeans. Suppose the EC could agree to act effectively on the following proposition: We intend to rebuild our physical heritage and turn over to the oext generation clean European seas, lakes and rivers, vital and sustainable forests, clean air and manageable transport facilities. On the basis of conversations with young Europeans, I conclude that, if credible, that course of action could greatly strengthen popular support for the European Community.

Third, in real economic terms, infrastructure investment is cheap at the present time. From its cost one must subtract the unemployment bene-

European country, they could yield a deteriora-tion in the balance of payments due to excessive imports. That is an important technical reason why the policy should be adopted by the EC as a whole, or by most of the community.

The second problem is that a rapid movement toward full employment could yield a surge in money wage rates in excess of productivity increases and a return to unit-cost inflation. That is one reason why a strong infrastructure investment policy requires a reliable incomes policy along with a willingness to temper excessive nd, if and when it comes about, with liscal and monetary policy.

Incomes policies: The Atlantic world could enjoy high growth with relatively low rates of inflation without strong incomes policies from 1951 to the mid-1960s for a reason that macroeconomists seldom discuss: The prices of energy. food and raw materials were declining. We can-not count on that damper on inflation should we return to regular growth and low unemployment rates. And, after a period of stagnant or declining real incomes, and without a commitment to incomes policies. labor is likely to seek excessive money wage increases.

These are the reasons why some European (and other) governments see no way to control inflation for the long pull other than maintaining a kind of Marxist reserve army of the unem-ployed. But if my conclusion about the mood of Europe is correct, the days when that policy will Europe is correct, the days when that policy will remain politicians will have to face up to the difficult but, in my view, inescapable task of leading their societies to install incomes policies for the long run.

I would only repeat what I have said of this problem in the American context. Clearly, the task is possible because incomes policies have been sustained for long periods in some demonstration.

been sustained for long periods in some democratie societies — for example. Austria and Ja-pan. The task is difficult: incomes policies have broken down after periods of success in a good many democratic societies. Clearly, the creation and maintenance of an incomes policy is a quasi-constitutional task, and should be approached with the solemnity of any effort to establish new, abiding rules of the game. But an incomes policy is not a zero-sum game: All parties gain. In this case, I see no other way for Western societies to move into a generation of sustained growth and low unemployment without inflation.

'Incomes policy is not a zero-sum game.'

Suppose these conclusions are more or less correct, and suppose Western Europe should move in concert to break out of its present impasse along the lines suggested. Two larger results would almost certainly follow. First, a Europe closing the technological gap between itself and Japan and the United States, employing its working force and keeping infla-tion under control would quite easily manage its defense expenditures, including those designed to push the nuclear threshold farther down the road. Talk of U.S. troop withdrawals and Europe vs. the Pacific basin would soon subside. To put it another way, the failure to deal with economic problems on both sides of the Atlantic is likely to put greater strain on the Atlantic Alliance than quasi-isolationist politicians in the United States or neutralist polincians in Europe.

Second, a Western Europe strengthened by its own endeavors along these lines would not constitute a very attractive target for Soviel nuclear or other pressure.

conomic austerity.

But Mr. González cannot go on

Mondale

NEW YORK — Who says Walter Mondale can't win? Virtually ev-eryone, it seems. But little is certain in politics, as Harry Truman fans can testify, and in a presidential cam-paign the cliche just happens to be true! Anything can happen. Last Sept, I, for instance, the Russians shot down that Korean airliner - a horror story that would have changed the course of an election in Mr. Reagan's favor. But such a bolt from the blue might have had the opposite effect: President Gerald Ford's fluff of an easy question on Poland in the 1976 campaign debate was such a late-inning disaster.

Another reason the Democrats should not despair is that Mr. Reagan's big lead is in the polls and the only lead that counts is at the polls.

Jimmy Carter emerged from the 1976 Democratie convention with a 21-point lead over Mr. Ford: but on election day, Mr. Carter squeaked in with 51 percent of the vote. In 1980, polls suggested a close vote until the last 10 days of the campaign, when sentiment swung over to Mr. Reagan, Mark Shields, the columnist, has pointed out that even after the president's visit to China, his D-Day and Irish triumphs, recent favorable eco-nomie statistics and the long Mondale-Hart bloodletting he leads Mr. Mondale by only 50 to 35 percent.

That is an impressive gap, but it still leaves a familiar incumbent, who has had the headlines breaking his way, with the support of barely half the poll respondents. And an impressive Democratic convention - not necessarily a noncontroversial one -could eat far into that 15-point lead before the fall campaign begins.

A third reason I believe that Mr.

Reagan is by no means invincible is what I call micropolitics - the poliries of specific voters as opposed to the macropolities of big issues such as the economy.

The president won a huge victory 489 to 49 — over Mr. Carter in the 1980 electoral college; but his margin in numerous states that he carried was slender indeed. The Reagan popular vote, in fact, was less than three million more than the combined totals of Mr. Carter and the independent John B. Anderu representeu only 31 percen of a low turnout (53.9 percent of the voting-age population). In sharp contrast, Richard M. Nixon in 1972 won by almost 20 million votes, 61 percent of a turnout of 55.5 percent. To reach his relatively unspectacular popular vote, moreover, Mr. Reagan cut into normally Democratic constituencies - winning only one percentage point less among bluecollar workers than Mr. Carter did, for example, and taking 41 percent of votes cast by low-income families. Mr. Reagan will of course retain some of those once-Democratic votes and no doubt his support in other areas of the population has grown since 1980: but he is also alienated many who voted for him then women in particular. The Anderson vote, moreover, appears to have come more from Democrats and women than from Republicans and men. It is fair to suggest, then, that even us an incumbent Mr. Reagan may have a difficult time getting 51 percent of the vote this time. The president will not face a candidate burdened - even taking into account Mr. Mondale's considerable problems - with weaknesses as great as those that finished off Mr. Carter: rising inflation and unemployment, the bostages in Iran. No independent is running to divide the Democrats. Women are more active and now heavily anti-Reagan. Blacks offer potentially a big new turnout, virtually all Democratic — and could hold the balance of power in the crucial Southern states.

Even in a rising economy, the memory of 10-percent unemployment may reduce Mr. Reagan's bluecollar support; and commune high interest rates will not help him among farmers and small businessmen enthusiastie Reagan supporters in 1980. A fumbling policy in the Mid-dle East might reduce his backing among Jews who mistrusted Mr. Carter in 1980.

Finally, Mr. Reagan is not home free even in big-issue macropolitics. His recent efforts to renew some kind of arms control talks with the Russians suggest his political discomfort on this issue. Since his 1980 victory. the big nuclear-freeze movement has developed and other peace activists have been reinvigorated. His militarist approach to Central young men must give away their lives America is dubious politically, and that region is one where a bolt from the blue could hurt him. None of this, of course, means that

Mr. Mondale can win without an astute, hard-hitting, effective campaign and a generally united party. But those are his and the Democrats problems; Mr. Reagan's only give them their chance - n real chance. The New York Times.

Phillips's fascination with the ssing of time is reflected in her "collecting old things, things," she added, pointing to the old tin toys, photographs and books that fill the modest twofamily house she bought when she moved to Boston a few years ago after spending a year as a fellow of the Bunting Institute of Radcliffe College.

Although Phillips did not have trouble getting "Machine Dreams" published ber previous collections of short stories have not been major commercial suc-cesses and she has had to teach intermittently at Boston University and Williams College.

Boston has a burgeoning comnumity of writers, such as James Carroll, author of "Mortal Friends"; Justin Kaplan, winner of the Pulitzer Prize for his biography "Mr. Clemens and Mark Twain," and John Updike. But Phillips's mixed neighborhood of Irish and Hispanic families is cut off from them, and she leads what she calls a "pretty quiet life, not very interesting, except to me."

In her novel, the intersection between her fictional family and America reaches a climax when Billy, the 19-year-old son, is draftmissing in action.

To point out that George Kaufman and Moss Hart and Stephen Sondheim did it a lot better in "Merrily We Roll Along" is not to deny the arrival of real dramatic intensity toward the end of Act 2. By then, however, some of the cracks in the fabric have become dangerously wide.

From the very beginning it looks as if we have two quite different plays here. The first is a waspish light comedy about the Oxbridge literary massa in the 1960s and 70s, complete with nostalgic references to Kenneth Tynan and accurate jokes about The Sunday Times taking on drama critics because the paper was impressed by their lack of qualifications. It is with this acid social commentary, in the best traditions of "Butley," that most of the Lyric's starry cast tlan Ogilvy, Simon Williams, Clive Francis in the lead role) seem happiest and most at home.

Underlying it is, however, a darker play about failure and marital betrayal and violent homosexual death that can only really work if we start to care deeply about the characters as people instead of prototypes of a certain literary aristocracy. The trouble is that we don't: Only Francis as the doomed poet-professor makes us believe that here is a man worth caring what happens to. As a result we have a brokenhacked piece not helped by an unusually heavy-handed production by Pinter.

A recent American movie called "The Big Chill" cut through this same postgraduate wilderness with much greater success, because it established its cast as people first and students and magazine editors only sec-

Grav is still the master of clenched despair, and at Hammersmith you will bear some of the most carefully and acerbically crafted dialogue in town. What you won't see is a very strong play.

Meanwhile at the Bush. Doug Lucie is carving out for himself a Grayish career, although as the social chronicler of the next generation. In his new "Progress," as in last year's "Hard Feelings," he writes about power games played in households where Time Out rather than The Times Literary Supplement is

Here we have a trio of gays: a tabloid hack of hilarious awfulness, a chauvinist pig who beats up his bride, and a television researcher married to a lesbian leader. Lucie throws them into a North London commune where the vodka is regularly poured into glasses and other people's eyes, and writes a viciously furny conversation piece about designs for '80s socialist

If those descriptions are reminiscent of Noel Coward titles from the '30s, that is no great surprise: Like Coward, like Gray, Lucie writes with a powerful mix of insight and loathing about enclosed groups of the socially, if not always economically, privileged. His people, too, have an appalling familiarity, and what they are after is above all the sexual power that brings all other powers in its wake.

The whole play is, as one of its residents notes of NEW YORK — The largest festival of American their house, like the bad-trips tent at an Isle of Wight, arts and entertainment to be held in the British Isles the political battle of the sexes.

In a year that has been marvelous for rare American reats (Eugene O'Neill's "Strange Interlude," William Saroyan's "The Time of Your Life"), perhaps the rarest of all is Paul Osborn's "Morning's at Seven" at the Westminster, Premiered on Broadway in 1939, when it flopped, and revived there in 1980, when it became an award-winning success, this is essentially popcorn Chekhov: Four sisters living in neighboring houses in a small Midwestern town in 1922 deal with three husbands, a son and a pregnant girlfriend. It is all the more fascinating for having come from the year in which O'Neill and Saroyan were telling more poetic tales of barroom losers.

Osborn's characters are not losers at all, nor are they much given to poetry. They are the backbone of America, the people Arthur Miller was soon to write about in "All My Sons." Sure there are a few skeletons in the closets: One of the sisters may have been off with one of her brothers-in-law, and another may have driven her husband to the brink of mental and physical decay. But these are what Thornton Wilder would have called good people. If, they drink it is with caution, if they go to the pictures it would doubtless be to see the paintings of Norman Rockwell or the movies of Frank Capra. One of the greater mysteries of the piece is wby Osborn, a neglected playwright who ended up in Hollywood doing journeyman screenplays for "South Pacific" and "The Yearling," never made this one over for James Stewart and Jane Wyman. In fact, it's a better constitute that might suggest. Othors's four better script than that might suggest. Osborn's four sisters may lack some of the potency of Chekhov's three, but they are still a formidable team, played here by Teresa Wright (the only Broadway survivor), Faith

Brook, Margaret Tyzack and Doreen Mantle.
Occasionally bitchy, in total control of men they have reduced to gibbering wreezs or forced into self-contained apartments within their own houses, they are a funny and touching sorority. When, at the end of the play, one of them announces that she is leaving, although only across the street, it is a heart-stooping moment.

"Morning's at Seven" retains its fascination because you never quite know where the author stands: Does he really believe with Wilder that people like this are what has made America great, or is he cynically asking us 10 look at the clenched pain, loneliness, marital despair and terrible meanness in a family that exists only to prove that relative values are still the only values worth fighting for - and over?

Adapting his New York production for an English cast, with Joe Vanek's faithful reproduction of William Ritman's gabled setting. Vivian Matalon has collected one of the strongest casts I have seen recently in the West End. The male quartet of wimps (John Church, Dott Fellows, Peter Jones and Alan Mae-Naughtan) are no less touching in defeat than their women are hilarious its their victories.

It is also good to welcome back Andree Melly as the only nonrelative, a middle-aged francee who bas somehow managed to stay engaged to the son of the house for eight years without strangling him. In the end what we have is a domestic tragedy of comball fascination: The family that preys together stays together.

From Aug. 4, 1982 - the official start of a campaign for greater religious and political concessions for Sikhs in Punjab — to June 3 when the army took control of the state — 410 people were killed and 1,180 injured in more than 1,200 violent incidents, the report said.

The Sikhs had initially sought constitutional recognition as a major religion, a greater share of local river water, and more control over the state capital. After the central government refused to negotiate on these demands, some Sikhs took a more militant line and sought independence from India

The government report said that secessionist extremists, including Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale, a mili-tant preacher, gradually took over the separatist movement. One month before the army takeover, it said, Mr. Bhindranwale ordered his followers to kill Hindus and civil servants and head for the Golden Temple if the government took acion against them.

The report said extremists inside the Golden Temple were organized on military lines and the building was fortified as well as any position of a modern army. The Singh ex-tremists had their own communications system, enough food to last several months and modern weapons, including anti-tank rockets. "Any delay on the part of the government in breaking these well-entrenched bastions of terrorists and secessionists would have been disastrous for the whole country." the report said.

In addition to the attack on the Golden Temple, Indian troops also forced their way into 41 other temples throughout the state to ejectextremists.

"The government has reason to believe that the terrorists were receiving different types of active support from foreign sources," the report said. "However, it would not be in the public interest to divulge

Behind the Mystique of Ferrari The Man and His Machine: Pioneering and Exacting

By Ralph Blumenthal New York Times Service

EW YORK — In the fields outside the small northern Italian town of Maranello, a new blood-red Ferrari 308 GTS is rocketing around a test track. The ear twists into 14 steep curves on the 1.86-mile course. On the 700-yard-long straightaway, the needle on the speedometer brushes 120 miles per hour.

The test driver pumps the brakes, downshifts and screeches into a hairpin turn. The rear wheels skid; he spins the steering wheel to regain traction.

"No problem," he says, grinning. Several more high-speed laps, and the decision is made: This Ferrari passes; it can be sold.

When it comes to high-performance luxury cars, the Ferrari name has long paced the pack. Imbued with the mystique of its 5,000 racing victories and numerous martyred champions, the Ferrari marque — the emblem of a prancing symbolize speed, danger, exactitude and exclusivity. black steed on a yellow shield - has come to

In an era of mass-produced cookie-cutter cars, restrictive speed limits and fuel economy, the Fiat-controlled company founded by Enzo Ferrari, 86. stands as an anomaly.

From 1947 to 1983, while Detroit turned out hundreds of millions of cars, the Ferrari plant at Maranello, nine miles (14.5 kilometers) outside the city of Modena, created exactly 32,441 Ferraris, no more, no less and, it might appear from the bewildering variety, no two alike.

"I should like to put something new in my cars every morning." Mr. Ferrari once said, and his propensity for changing models has driven Ferrari followers crazy ever since.

In the 1970s, while other car-makers were scaling down and making their cars more fuelefficient, Ferrari was building $85,000, 12-cylinder gas-guzzlers that could surpass 170 mph. Most other cars depreciate and get junked. Ferraris grow in value over time and achieve immortality through extensive restoration.

Demand for Ferraris substantially exceeds the supply yet the company will not step up production. "I could sell three times the number of cars I get." Steven Kessler, a Ferrari dealer in New York City, said.

Nowhere has Ferrari won a more appreciative audience than in the United States, where Ferrari sells at least 800 cars a year, about one-third of its annual output. Now the company is about in set off on a major new American initiative. By early 1985, Ferrari will introduce its biggest and

By producing the Testa Rossa for the United States, Ferrari hopes to preclude the flourishing "gray market" in its current flagship, the 512 Berlinetta Boxer. This big 12-cylinder, which is scheduled to go out of production this month, was not intended to be sold in the United States. Yet importers have been bringing the model in for adaptation, by private specialists, in American standards.

As Stan Nowak, a Ferrari historian and general manager of Bob Sharp Ferrari in Danbury, Connecticut, said: "The minute you tell people they can't get something, that's when they want

What purpose such diabolically fast, expensive and inefficient cars may serve in an era of energy worries, congested roads and restrictive speed limits, as in the United States, is a good question. It is not one that particularly troubles Ferrari officials. They say their cars can also be savored at 55 mph, that there is joy and safety in being able to unbend a steep curve at 40 mph or to climb hills effortlessly and with power to

But in the end, there is probably no sensible answer, save that those who can afford such cars

And they want them, it is clear, because they go fast. Frank Stella, the artist, was arrested not long ago for driving his silver Ferrari 105 mph on the Taconic State Parkway in northern New York state. A judge sentenced him in give lectures on art to local residents.

The Ferrari record has not been flawless. The For years the Ferrari clutch was notoriously heavy, and its spark plugs had a tendency to fail in crawling traffic.

The cars are also thirsty. The 308 is rated at only 11 miles per gallon. The factory, too, was legendary for an independence verging on arro-gance. Even the famous racing drivers told of cooling their heels for hours or days in the Cavallino café across from the factory before winning an audience with Enzo Ferrari.

By the 1947 racing season, Mr. Ferrari was ready with the first two cars bearing his name. and they and successors began winning races, starting with the Rome Grand Prix of 1947. By the end of last year. Ferraris had won about 5,000 races, including nine Formula 1 world championships, the last in 1979.

Yet, Mr. Ferrari's racetrack triumphs were also marred by tragedy, as his superpowered cars sometimes spun off the track and into crowds of spectators. Drivers complained that Mr. Ferrari always blamed them, never his cars, for the accidents.

In 1956, Enzo Ferrari's 24-year-old son and heir apparent. Dino, died of nephritis after a long battle with muscular dystrophy. His last project had been a line of six-cylinder cars that came to he known as Dinos.

Mr. Ferrari, increasingly withdrawn, clois-tered himself in his racing workshop and office, where a memorial candle flickered beneath a portrait of his son. He traveled little, boasting that he had not set font in Rome in 40 years. Critics who called him arbitrary and dictatorial also praised him as a Caesarian figure of singleminded, almost limatic genius.

Fiat's investment in Ferrari in 1969 was, in part, intended to inject needed cash into the racing effort and allow Mr. Ferrari to devote himself to the part of his business that he had always loved best.

His robust physique has turned frail, but associates say he still comes almost daily to his office at the test track to plot the course of Ferrari's Formula I racing, the fastest kind of auto racing and the only kind the company still enters. His enthusiasm has not waned. Americans who watched the Indianapolis 500 this year saw him in a television commercial promoting Goodyear tires.

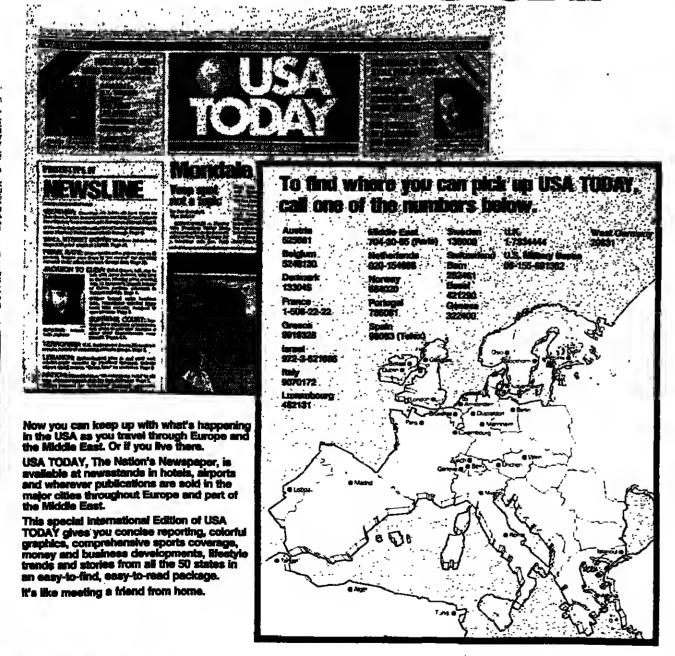

"The person who comes after me will have to take on a very simple inberitance." Mr. Ferrari once wrote. "To keep alive that desire for progress which has been pursued in the past, even if has involved the sacrifice of some of the noblest of buman beings.

Saudis Say OPEC May Cut Output

Yamani Sees Rise In World Demand

> By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribane

VIENNA - Saudi Arabia asserted Tuesday that OPEC would trim production sufficiently to stop the recent fall of oil prices.

Speaking at the start of a meeting of the Organization of Petro-leum Exporting Countries, bowev-er, the Saudi oil minister, Sheikh Ahmed Zaki Yamani, predicted that demand for OPEC oil would rise in this year's fourth quarter. He also said the cartel may bold

s meeting at the end of September Presumably, such a meeting would address the problem of sharing any additional production among OPEC's 13 members, who produce about 40 percent of oil consumed in non-Communist countries.

For the present, Sheikh Yamani said, OPEC must reduce its production to the group's self-imposed ceiling of 17.5 million barrels a day. He estimated that OPEC had exceeded that ceiling by at least a million barrels a day in June, but added: "Whenever there is a problem we have proved inside OPEC that we live up to our responsibilities and control ourselves."

Oilmen consider a sharp reduction in Saudi production crucial to shrinking the current oversupply of oil and relieving downward pres-sure on prices. Some analysts say Saudi production was as high as 5.7 million barrels a day in June. Sheikh Yamani did not provide a production figure but said sales amounted to about 4.7 million barrels a day last month.

Nigeria and the United Arab Emirates, among other OPEC countries, are pressing for higher quotas. But most ministers seem inclined to alter the quota system during the current meeting, which is expected to end Wednesday.

Some ministers were warning against expectations that demand would rise markedly later this year. Kuwait's minister, Sheikh Ali Kalifa Al-Sabab, predicted that demand would total 18 million barrels a day in the current quarter, only marginally above OPEC's Ministers' are also expected to take up the question of appointing a new secretary-general to oversee OPEC's administrative headquarters in Vienna. The position has been vacant for a year as OPEC has failed to find a compromise candidate. Both Iran and Iraq are demanding the bonor.

New Restraints on Saudi Currency Worry Offshore Banks in Bahrain

Then the agency began bap-hazard enforcement of a longdormant Saudi withholding tax on interest paid by Saudi borrowers to foreign banks, thus raising the Bahrain banks' cost of lending to Saudi Arabia. In addition, it called for spe-cial 90-day deposits by Saudi commercial banks in an effort to mop up excess riyals that in the past had been lent to the Bahrain offshore banks, or OBUs, as they are called, which in turn had lent them back to Saudi companies.

Making riyal loans to Saudi Arabia has traditionally accounted for about 22 percent of the business of the ORUs In individual cases, however, the figures can be much higher.

The Saudis' reasons for the moves, which were made without warning, were given in a recent speech by the monetary agency's acting governor. Sheikh Hama Saud al-Sayyari.

The agency wants to bring the offshore riyals back home, he said, giving more Saudi business to domestic banks and reducing Saudi Arabia's dependence on the offsbore Bahrain banking Saudi Arabia, he continued, is Stable or falling oil prices have brought government spending cuts along the Gulf during the past two years, depressing business activity and reducing credit demand. And the Iran-Iran war has curtailed lending in those countries, making it harder for banks to raise funds.

Getty Takeover Cleared by FTC

WASHINGTON - The Federal Trade Commission gave final approval Tuesday to Texaco's $10.1-billion takeover of Getty Oil Co. after Texaco agreed to take steps to satisfy antirust concerns.

Several states asked the FTC to block the merger or to change the terms under which it was tentatively agreed in February, because it was feared many independent retailers and refiners would be forced out of business.

FTC approval for the merger was on a 4-to-1 vote. Under the agreement. Texaco will be given an option it did not have earlier for divesting itself of Gerty properties in the West.

Macintosh Production To Double

By Susan Chira

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Apple Computer Inc. plans to double the manufacturing capacity for its new and highly successful Macintosh computers by the end of this year, the president, John Sculley, said.

Apple dealers have said that demand for the Macintosh has far exceeded supply. Although Apple would oot say how many it is making, it said it is now canable of producing about 40,000 a month.

Analysts said Apple's confidence of demand for the Macintosh could be justified if Apple follows through on its commitment to offer more software and increase the machine's memory this year. But they also said that questions had been raised about how effectively the machine has been introduced into the office market. They said it still lacks the software and memory to compete with office computers made by International Business Machines Corp. Barbara Krausc, a spokesman for Apple who was attending the

Air France Expected to Name Long

Marceau Long chairman and president of Air Inter, France's domestic airline, is expected to be named chairman of Air France at a board meeting of the international carrier Wednesday, according to French airline sources.

Mr. Long, who was general sec-retary of the government from 1975 to 1982, will replace Pierre Giraudet, who took over the top job at Air France in 1976, and plans to become chairman and president of Radar, a privately owned French distribution group, the sources said. Mr. Giraudet will reach the mandatory retirement age of 65 at the end of this year.

Both airlines are government-controlled, and the moves are expected to be approved by the Cabinet, probably Thursday.

Pierre Eelsen, general secretary for governmental relations at the state-owned automaker Renault, is expected to be named as the successor to Mr. Long at Air Inter, the sources added.

PEUGEOT S.A.

ORDINARY AND EXTRAORDINARY GENERAL MEETING OF 29 JUNE 1984

Address by Monsieur Jean-Paul PARAYRE, Chairman.

(Extracts)

Ladies and Centlemen.

As you have just observed, our Group has started a recovery to 1983. While our losses in consolidated accounts reach F.Fr. 2,590 million, they show a reduction, on a comparable presentation, of F.Fr. 1,200 million in relation to 1982; the operational margin reaches F.Fr. 2,400 million, an improvement of oearly F.Fr. 2,300 million, and the cash flow becomes positive by nearly F.Fr. 1,100 million, whereas in 1982 it was negative by F.Fr. 600 million.

This improvement of our results is mainly due to the Automobiles Peugeot branch, since the recovery capacity of Automobiles Citroën has so far been more limited. You have also observed the leading part played to this favourable evolution by the foreign industrial subsidiaries of Automobiles Peugeot: Talbot Motor is stable again after several years of heavy losses, and the unfavourable tendency at Automobiles Talbot has been reversed, albeit in a more progressive manner. On the other hand operations of the French companies have continued to be deeply affected in 1983 by the full impact of the economic and social measures decided in 1982, particularly the heavy reduction of the annual length of working time and the freezing of sales prices in France. I would add that io spite of their persistent efforts, the French companies of the Group have not been authorized to make timely adjustments, at a desired level, to their production man-power, this has weighed heavily on their productivity.

Nevertheless, the 1983 accounts reflect an undeniable improvement, which of course is short of the ambitious targets we had set, but which is all the more encouraging since it was accomplished mainly during the second half of the fiscal year.

While we are at present intensifying the strictness of our management methods to order to ensure short term results, we cootinue to prepare the future.

We have decided, in spite of financial constraints, to place our investments in harmony-without excess but without shortages—with our desire to build the future of the Group, to renew at an early stage the models of Automobiles Peugeot and of Automobiles Citroën and to cootinue, with these launchings, to modernize our production tools by adopting the most recent techniques.

The pursuit of this policy implies a reinforcement of the financial situation of our subsidiaries, which are bearing much too heavy financial loads. The shareholders' equity of Automobiles Peugeot has just been increased by one million Francs. When the time comes, and after the proviso of excess man power has been completely removed. measures will have to be taken for Citroën.

A year ago I mentioned to you the profound changes affecting the automobile industry and the measures taken in order to enable our Group to maintain its rank in international competition.

· I believe that I can say that we have accomplished significant progress in accordance with the priorities which we had established.

We do not under-estimate, however, the important efforts which remain to be made in order to improve the situation of our Group, to confirm fully the recovery of Automobiles Peugeot and to engage further the recovery of

Everyone is aware that this is a lengthy and exacting task which cannot suffer any slackening. Thanks to this mobilization of energies and wills, and provided the environment is not ton unfavourable for us, we do expect in 1984. to accentuate the financial improvements started last year.

WHAT I find interesting about Larry La-lywood," is the fact that he himself is not sure where his sincerity, or his integrity, begins and ends. This is part of his difficulty when his mother dies. How much of what he feels, he wonders, is cinema and how much is grief? Watching his uncle bargain with the funeral director for a better price. Larry envies him his familiarity with the real.

Larry, who is a Hollywood director, flies to New York City for the Juneral. Since he cannot bear to confront the memory of his mother directly, he approaches her by working his way back through his past. He sees old friends and old loves, revisits old scenes, as if these could tell him how he put so much distance between imself and his mother. He is chagrioed to find the people he used to know as perplexed about what they are doing as he is. Haven't any of them arrived at the truth, he asks himself. He had always thought that when you grew up. sooner or later you ran into the truth. It came to you together with your intimation of mortality. The realization that ambiguity is a life sentence is Larry's Hollywood translation of Josh Greenfeld, who wrote "Harry and Ton-to," is one of the regular guys in the locker room of American fiction. We trust him to mistrust himself, to make a melancholy joke instead of a portentous statement. He is not a philosopher like Saul Bellow, but an observer, a bookkeeper of indefible impressions.

While there are a few false notes in "The Return of Mr. Hollywood" and two or three scenes I wish Greenfeld had cut, we can always hear Larry. He talks to us and to himself at the same time, in the same voice, and this gives the book an intimacy that I found very appealing. And though I don't know anything about Hollywood, I think that what Larry says about it is interesting, convincing and a refreshing change from the familiar condescensions.

Eleven years ago. Iris Owens published "After Claude," one of the earliest portraits of the female anti-hero, a sort of distaff "Notes From Underground." It was very funny, but it fell apart at the end, "Hope Diamond Refuses," a second novel, is only intermittently funny and falls apart from the very beginning. It's as if Owens had taken Harriet, the protagonist of "After Claude," and set her down in a different environment, one that had passed beyond her rhetoric.

Hope is not so much a character as a stream of epithets. Almost every sentence in "Hope Diamond Refuses" is crowded with would-be wisecracks as Owens keeps trying to make something out of nothing. Hope was married to a "Ustanian" prince she met in New York City and divorced him for reasons that are not very clear in order to grouse in a Greenwich Village basement.

There are two other women in the book both of whom I found unbelievable — and couple of men brought in to show that series anare and a delusion. In the last part of some and a defusion, in one and part of book, Hope captionsly flies to Ustan in the East to see her former husband, who is higher a brave and hopeless battle against the emization of his country. She turns seminated here, and while this is a relief from carping, it's not really her thing.

"Hope Diamond Refuses" reads as if One had been distracted while writing it he noise of modern fiction. It seems to me the amid this noise, she can't hear her own vote and resorts instead to shouting. I don't see Hope as the victim of fate, sexism or any other ism. If she is a victim, it's the author who is the perpetrator. Sometimes, we have to remi ourselves of this possibility

Trading Rules Honored in the Breach of Promise

LONDON - Conscience time is end of it. here again. A time to decide what value, if any, to place on the word of sportsman of the 1980s. Next Tuesday, UEFA, the European soccer anthority, will try to estab-lish whether FC Cologne of West Germany or Manchester United of England is the rightful employer of Scottish international Gordon

He appears, promiscuous fellow. to have promised himself in writing

In dark midwinter, cold and lonely on the shores of the North Sea where he performed for Aberdeen, Strachan had been flattered by Cologne's overtures and signed a letter of intent to join that club in the summer. But come May, the young man's fancy turned to Manchester United, whose offer of a four-year contract be hurriedly also

A slender red-head, he stands out on physical appearance alone, but around players' signatures long ago his touch and cavalier instincts are wholly croded the triffing matter of a throwback to Scotsmen of old who were more obsessed with conjuring up trickery with the ball than

But whether his flair on the field excuses cavalier behavior off it is another matter. "It had been my amhition to play on the continent for the last two years," he has ex-plained, "I never even thought of England, hat United appeared at the last moment and you just don't turn down a chance like that."

The opportunity will, if allowed to stand, pay Strachan a reported £120,000 (roughly $156,000) a year. Aberdeen, meanwhile, collects from Manchester £600,000, almost double the figure Cologne would have paid. Given such fiscal disparity, it's not surprising that the British pre-sent a united front against the West German claim. Both Aberdeen and Manchester United have rejected as worthless the Cologne document bearing Strachan's signature, al-though Manchester has apparently had an offer of recompense ignored

"At no time did Aberdeen give Strachan permission to speak to Cologne, insisted Manchester's chairman, Martin Edwards. "They [Aberdeen] did not consider the agreement valid." "At the time," Aberdeen Manager Alex Ferguson has recalled, "Gordon had fallen out with me and went ahead and signed the paper [of intent] without seeking ad-

Rather that, though, than the number of directors appalled at the way supposedly outlawed agents have grown fat through the irregular trafficking of players on the international market. He is one of a tiny minority prepared to do anything about it.

Cologne probably accepts in private that Strachan, n player of moods, might indeed be worthless were his heart not in the club. The established players would un-doubtedly build an intolerable suspicion every time the import went off the boil.

He will, we may be sure, play in Manchester next season alongside Jesper Olsen, the Dane whose departure from Ajax of Amsterdam was also conducted amid squeals of acrimony and irregular transfer controversy. On the playing side, Strachan and Olsen are a pair of exquisitely gifted individuals entering a league that will test as never before their suspect stamina, consistency and fragility. Their skills are so rare we must hope they hlossom, but it is undoubtedly a gamble.

Their arrival is largely financed from two sources - £500,000 in insurance money on the premature-ly ended career of injured winger Steve Coppell and the £1 million AC Milan is paying for Ray Wil-kins. Coppell was a thoroughly de-pendable, incustrious and often penetrative workman and Wilkins gence, leadership and consistency. So the balance of Manchester's side is completely shifted. That is the fun and the challenge of team sports. Manager Ron Atkinson made it plain from the start that he wanted a team built on more daring, more inspirational ways than Wilkins provided, and it is his prerogative to make changes. Fair enough. If UEFA decides Manchester has legitimate priority to Strachan, we can concentrate on hope that the authority will also, in casting its verdict, make some announcement about its intent to lay down standards that leave the game's millions of followers in no

The First-Name Ploy

as Ido

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK —In this dream I am a White Huuse big shut being grilled by Ted Koppel on ABC's "Nightline." only I can't result of the say. Now, Jim. you know as well as the say. The say is a say is a say. The say is a say is a say. The say is a say is a say is a say is a say. The say is a say. The say is a say is member Koppel's first name, and it's terrifying, especially when Koppel stops mincing words and says. Then you admit the charges against you are true, do you?"

I don't know what the charges are - this is not a fully plotted dream - but since I am a White House big shot it seems all too likely that the charges are true.

probable truthfulness of the charges that makes me panic. It is my sudden inability to remember Koppel's first name. I have taken the White House course on how to deal with TV interrogators when the charges against you are absolutely true. The message of the instructor was: 'In replying to your host's most brutal questions, use his or her first name — or nick-name if you know it. This will dis-tract the public's attention from the charges against you by suggesting that you and the interviewer are old drinking buddies.

I learned the lesson, all right, but I have forgotten Koppel's first name just as he asked the ultimate question. "Then you admit the charges against you are true, do

With the entire insomniac population of the United States watching me. I hesitate as long as I dare. canvassing my brain futilely, for the correct first name, and when nothing comes, in desperation 1 say. "Now Roger, you know as well as I do that I've admitted nothing of the son.

"If you were under the impression that I am Roger Mudd. my question must have flustered you, says Koppel. "Let me restate break the iron rule. "Now, Mr. Will, you know as

At his mention of Roger Mudd. I suddenly recall - as you can recall only in dreams - that I was endlessly interviewed by Roger Mudd only yesterday and addressed him repeatedly as "David."

Recalling that humiliation, I am suddenly, thanks to the miracle of dreams, released from Koppel's custody for interrogation by David Brinkley. Sam Donaldson and George Will. Brinkley is saying. "I assume you admit taking the mon ey but deny any wrongdoing."

All I can think is. "He's not Rog-

Donaldson, a trenchant interrogator, interrupts, "Apparently it's so difficult for you to admit taking the money that you have lost contact with reality and are under the impression that you are on the MaeNeil-Lehrer News Hour being grilled by Jim Lehrer. Robert Mac-Neil and Charlayne Hunter-Gault. But in this dream it is not the Are we to infer that you do, in fact. admit not only taking the money.

but also wrongdoing At this moment, of course, I have completely forgotten Donaldson's first name, but to avoid looking even guiltier I elect to answer immediately without stalling for name retrieval, so I say: "Now, Charlayne, you know as well as I Will looks at me very oddly. Perhaps, being flustered by the sight of me here with Messrs. Brinkley and Donaldson, instead of in my old chair between Martin Agronsky and Carl Rowan, you are admitting to more than you intend." he says.

Here is an extremely dangerous stion that demands a swift reply, but what in the name of heaven is Will's first name? The first names of all the great television interrogators of all the years gone by flash instantly through my mind.

Walter, John, David and Chet, Harry ann Barbara, Howard. Sandy, Mike and Morley, Dan. Dave, Diane, Bryan, Bill, Ton, Jack. Jane, Judy, that other David - all these and hundreds more speed by in an instant, but none of them seems appropriate to precede well as I. Instantly whistles blow, all telecasting comes to a halt, the grand jury throws out the case against me, the president gives me a citation, and the Guinness Book of World Records grants me a full page com-plete with portrait. For the first time in history a government big shot has been grilled by a TV celebrity without total loss of dignity.

Analyzing Michael Jackson's Appeal

By Daniel Goleman New York Times Service T EW YORK - Why such an 1 Noutpouring of adulation for Michael Jackson?

He is a talented performer, as he is a talented singer, songwriter and dancer. But as with every entertainer of mass appeal, part of the rock singer's popularity must be explained by the image he projects.

What is it about Jackson's persona that makes him the star of the moment and accounts for his appeal to contemporary — espe-cially young — audiences? Jackson, who with his brothers is currently on a multi-city, multimillion-dollar concert tour in the United States, breaks the mold of many earlier rock-star stereo-types. With his sexually ambigu-ous appearance and voice, he follows in the footsteps of such androgynous rock stars as David Bowie and Boy George.

But his appeal, in the opinion of a number of psychologists, may go beyond androgyny. In his private life, if one is to believe the portrayals in the popular press, the 25-year-old Jackson, has nev-er touched alcohol or drugs. Furthermore, the reports go, he eats no red meat and is a virgin.

A devout Jehovah's Witness.

he lives with his parents as a virtual recluse, although he occasionally makes forays in disguise to distribute religious literature. Jackson reportedly spends much of his free time watching cartoons from his large collection, carries on imagined conversations with mannequins as though they were people, and has very few personal friends. One of those friends, Jane Fonda, has said: "Michael reminds me of the walking wounded. He's an extremely fragile person."

That fragility, in the view of many psychologists interviewed. may be one key to Jackson's pop-

"His vulnerability is especially appealing to young and pre-teens," said Robert Gould, former director of adolescent psychiatry at New York University particularly attractive to young medical school, "When he makes girls who would be threatened by an appearance in public, he's so shy and inarticulate he looks like —13 and younger — seem to be a he needs someone to take care of core consutuency of his." him. It brings out protective feelings - he's almost like a pet you want to adopt.

"Jackson's passive shyness is quite unusual in rock stars, as is his cleancut, sweet innocence. It's a maebo type. And just those girls

Jackson's ambiguous sexuality may also appeal to teen age boys. though for different reasons. "His androgyny holds a fascination for adolescents, particularly boys." said John Munder Ross. a clinical psychologist at Cornell Medical College. "Unconscious-ly, it's hard to give up the possibility of being both sexes. This ground around 15 or so. He em-bodies someone who seems to live out that ambisexual fantasy." There is also the sense that Jackson exists in a "fantasy land," in the view of Dr. David Guttman, professor of psychiatry at Northwestern University in Evanston, Hinois.

"Michael Jackson evades the choices of adult identity," Guttman said. "He embodies the funtasy of being and having everything. He seems to be both sexus. to be sensual and sexy while staying a good boy, to be black and white at the same time. He's forever young, a potent refutation of having to grow up and choose adult responsibilities. That seems to appeal to kids these days, who seem to want to put off consider-ing an adult identity."

The innocence of that perennial youthfulness may be another drawing card of the Jackson persona. "With all the violence kids are subject to these days. Jackson's sweet and pure appeal speaks to an inner need, Guttman said. "He's an antidote to the excessive violence of the Still, Jackson's audience is a far larger group than teen-agers alone. James Hillman, an eminent Jungian analyst, considers that Jackson is an embodiment of the "Puer," a psychological ar-chetype representing an ageless innocence, probably best-known in our culture in the shape of Peter Pan. And Jackson himself once said. "I totally identify with Peter Pan, the lost boy of never-

According to Hillman, the Puer is "inspired effermate, inventive, passive, fiery and capricious." The Puer also bas an "angelie hermaphroditic quality where masculine and feminine are perfectly joined."

The Puer archetype, according to Hillman, may have a special appeal to the collective mind of the United States at the moment.

"As much as we are pressed by the harsh and tough economic realities, the world of the bottom line and success and failure," he said. "we yearn for the time when life was free of all those pressures, Michael Jackson embodies that innocent boy whose life is unfetambivalence is more obvious in tered, full of style and beauty the early teens, and goes under- without the grit of reality."

In Miami, Yvonne Ryding, Miss Sweden, gasps as she learns that she has been chosen from among 80 beants queens as Miss Universe for 1984. At right is the firs runner-up, Tisha Snyman, 20, Miss South Africa. Second runner-up was Miss Venezuela, Carmen Maria Monfiel 19; third was Miss Philippines, Dess Verdadero, 21, fourti runner-up was Miss Colombia, Susana Caldas, 20.
